This is a five-track, self-released, limited, red vinyl 7" ep by JAD from Warsaw. The content was recorded in January 2020 at the Lazy Sound Studio (at which their full-length album was recorded as well, btw). The recording and mix were performed by Grzegorz and Marcin Kucharski.

That's about the technical details. The A side features three tracks with eloquently sounding names: Pętla (Hangman Noose), Wstręt (Repulsion) and Zwykła Śmierć (Ordinary Death). The B side consists of Agresja (Aggression) and Spalona Ziemia (Scorched Earth). The last song perfectly describes what is left of us after we are done playing this ep. Indeed, this JAD band does pay homage to the old punk/crust tradition from the mid 80s, very well.

This is a perfect “live-show-type-of” music, capable of getting even the most static audience to start moshing. Very energetic, these songs surely are, this music can generate enough power to get a whole city going for weeks, if you know what I mean!

Hard to stay immobile when this stuff is on; this is a very unsophisticated sort of music with a very strong lyrical content – a real blow aimed exactly at between your eyes.

This`ll knock you down for sure, well, unless you already are part of the moshing crowd, and pogo-dancing in front of the stage. JAD is a very unique band and this clearly proves that even nowadays there are people able to create music which is so high-spirited!
